There is something special about fall.
The crisp mornings, the changing leaves, the smell of cinnamon in the kitchen, and the comfort of gathering around the table with the people we love.

Food has always been a part of those moments.
And living with kidney disease shouldn't mean giving up the joy that comes from sharing a warm, homemade meal.
We created this Harvest Recipe Book to bring a little more comfort, flavor, and inspiration into your kitchen. Inside, you'll find recipes inspired by everything we love about the season—from warm apple and cinnamon breakfasts to savory herb-roasted dinners, comforting soups, colorful harvest sides, and cozy desserts.

Our goal is simple:
To show that kidney-conscious cooking can still be delicious, comforting, and something you look forward to.
Throughout this book, we've thoughtfully chosen ingredients and cooking techniques that can help you be mindful of things like sodium and phosphorus while still creating meals that feel satisfying and special.

Whether you're cooking for yourself, your family, or gathering around the table with friends, we hope these recipes remind you that making mindful food choices doesn't have to take the joy out of eating.

So grab your favorite mug, turn on some music, and let the kitchen smell like fall.

Welcome to the harvest.

A Little Note Before You Begin

Everyone's kidney journey is different.

Your nutritional needs may depend on your stage of kidney disease, lab results, medications, dialysis status, and other health conditions. What works well for one person may not be right for another.

That's why this cookbook is meant to be a source of inspiration and general education—not a replacement for personalized medical or nutrition advice.

Before making significant changes to your diet, we encourage you to talk with your doctor or a registered dietitian, preferably one who specializes in kidney disease (renal dietitian). They can help you understand your individual needs for sodium, potassium, phosphorus, protein, fluids, and other nutrients.

If your healthcare team has given you specific dietary instructions, always follow their recommendations first.
